Coaching Philosophy

Currently I'm working on several international projects: AddSoccer (USA), PSS (POLAND) and RFEF.

Professor of CEDIFA: an official organization (UEFA) for the training of football coaches.

I also formed part of a project to bring the world of sports counseling to the coaches / soccer players.

In the last decade I have been training soccer players from the Spanish Professional League and members from the Granada CF coaching staff to scouting traveling around the country.

In 2008 I helped develop the first book describing Futbol Club Barcelona (FCB) Team Model with Pep Guardiola, published by Oscar Cano Moreno in May 2009.

I have published articles in professional journals in football and participated in presentations on tactics in football.

I'm an active person and very interested in expanding my horizons looking for experiences to assist in my development.

From this concern, I consider important to explore other settings where interacting and sharing knowledge.

I strive for player development in and out the field, promoting competitive soccer in a fun, safe, and positive environment.

Develop and improve each player's technical ability and better understanding of the game tactically.

Train the player's to develop a well-rounded player who can play multiple positions. Improve player's speed of play.

I provide my players with situational recommendation that would help them make better decisions.
